1. Read the following passage and answer the questions that follows :

If there is a perfect mountain valley in the world, it is certainly the magnificent Valley of Kashmir. It is surrounded by snow capped lofty mountains which make it a land of springs and beautiful lakes. It is 87 miles long and 20-25 miles wide and 5315 feet (1620 kms) above sea level. It is well watered and fertile. River Jhelum is its lifeline and most of the population of Kashmir lives on its banks.

For the last hundreds years the beauty of Kashmir has held visitors spell bound. Mughal emperors were so much enamoured of its beauty that they built magnificent gardens around many springs or on the slopes of mountains touching the edge of Dal Lake. Emperor Jahangir is reported to have said "If there's paradise on earth, it is here". The Kashmir valley has a feminine charm of its own; the beauty of mountains, lakes and the hill slopes makes the valley an ideal place for gardening. Whenever a hill came sloping down gently touching a water reservoir like a lake, a garden was laid out. The general features of mughal gardens are that they are laid out on terraces on the slope of a hill and there is a water channel in the middle of the garden, the water of which flows down from one terrace to another making brilliant cascades. These gardens are full of brilliant flowers of variegated colours and the spray of water falling from the fountains in the water channel protects the visitors from the heat of the day. Srinagar, the chief city of the valley and the summer capital of the state of Jammu and Kashmir , lies on the banks of river Jhelum ; the river is spanned by nine bridges, which add to the picturesqueness of the city.

Generally speaking, houses are situated either on the Jhelum or on the canals with which the city is intersected; but many of the modern buildings do not have the water front. The chief attraction of the city is the Dal Lake. Clear reflection of the mountain and the sky in its calm waters is very charming. The lake is connected with river Jhelum by a canal which also with its magnificent trees and water birds presents a delightful view. Cruising in the lake in a shikara (a decorated small boat with a canopy and cushions) is very enjoyable; it also gives a peep into the life of the people depending on the lake. To spend a few days in a houseboat gliding smoothly on the surface of the lake is also recommended.

By the time our delayed train reached and I disembarked with my father and baby Lavanya, it was well past midnight. It was cold, dark and foggy. My husband, Manas, who was to receive us, was nowhere in sight. Soon the platform became deserted.

Then, a burly man approached us and offered to carry our bags. He wasn't wearing the usual porter's red shirt and tag, and though I was wary, my father decided to hire him. Leaving Lavanya and me with the man, my father went to look for Manas. I took a closer look at the man and felt apprehensive. He was big hairy, his face was pock marked and his eyes looked bloodshot. Just then Lavanya, who had been sleeping in my arms, awoke and turned to look at the porter. He gave a playful smile and held out his arms. I thought she'd start crying and held her closer. But she smiled back and twisted herself out of my arms into his.

Now I was really scared. What if he ran away with my baby? He must have sensed my fear and, even before I reached out to take Lavanya back, he handed her to me. Turning around, he mumbled that though everyone was scared of him, my innocent baby had accepted him. His eyes had tears in them. I didn't know what to say.

At that moment, my father returned with Manas. The man picked up our bags and walked towards the cars park. As we followed him, I asked Manas to pay him a little extra. But, having put our luggage in the car, the man refused to take payment from us. Coming up to me, he placed his hand on my baby's head for a moment as if to say, "God bless you!" and walked away.
